

Tutor Feedback- Reflective Activity Ethics in Computing

Hi Sahib,

Thank you for sending this through, my comments as follows:

- You have looked at both sides of the argument as well as the facts of the case, this is good practice
- You have also drawn through some citation and long referencing; continue with this approach and ensure that where there is a fact or research, to add citation. Where theory can be drawn through the discussion ensure this happens to maximise your opportunity for citation. This approach also allows you to extend your list of research references. Theory or fact can be used to underpin particular points which don't directly relate the context your talking about in a scenario for example, but that underpin factual information that is applied to a scenario.
- You do draw conclusions through the formative and this is good practice to 'round' the discussion up
